DDL20347: a. — a better light, higher temperatures, more rain and snow, greener landscape — had convinced her to stay. “It was my hometown and the only place I knew,” she said. “I just had to take it.” Rachel Kibbe in her West Village apartment. After leaving uni, Rachel had landed a job and moved to the Caribbean, where she learned to love the water and its beauty. But, by the time she returned, it was too late. While renting her new apartment, she looked out her window one day and saw the street lamps and traffic lights on her block at night. “I thought, ‘Man, I’ve missed this, I’ve missed this home,’” she said. A few days later, she left the apartment and moved in with her parents. “It’s just, ‘Here we are, good-bye to the big city,’” she said. Her first step, after she had a look at the neighborhood, was to find a house that suited her. In the West Village, she found one with five bedrooms and big windows. “It was an old house, with kind of a nice layout and the ceilings were huge, so it was great for a teenage girl,” she said. “I just loved it.” She still feels lucky that she found a place in the neighborhood. When she used to walk down the block, she’d see familiar faces and know them by name. Now she hardly ever sees anyone she knows. “I was always saying, ‘Why did I have to come back?’” she said. “But I had made so many good memories and connections, so it felt like I had to make the most of it.” Or, as she put it, “It just feels like New York is in my DNA.” Since Rachel left the city, Rachel has been in and out
