Netanyahu's comments came at the behest of Jewish Home leader Naftali Bennett, who had previously expressed concern that the government would not be able to deliver on its promises for the peace process. "If no one does something, in the worst case scenario there may be very strong consequences, which is what the prime minister said, that a state of exception might be required," Bennett told Yedioth Ahronoth. Bennett was also one of the first members of the right-wing coalition to denounce Netanyahu's statement.
